Politics will be a primary focus for markets in 2024, the largest election year in human history. More than 75 countries will go to the polls in 2024, including several of the world's most populous countries (India, the United States, the EU, Indonesia, Russia, Mexico, Pakistan, Bangladesh and South Korea). Taiwan's January 13th election will also be closely watched for its potential geopolitical significance. Just two days later, the US Presidential election season will officially kick-off with the first GOP primary in Iowa on January 15, now less than two weeks away.

In order to win the party nomination, a US Republican candidate needs to win a simple majority (1,215 of 2,429) of delegates at-stake. With the primary season starting in January, the first four contests could be decisive as wins in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina would provide strong momentum into Super Tuesday on March 5th (when 36% of delegates are at-stake).
